How to receive pediatric emergency outpatient care

Many parents feel uneasy about sudden health problems involving their children. At Toyota City, pediatricians take turns being on-duty for any overnight and weekend emergencies requiring hospital admission or surgery in children. Many parents may have experienced rushing into the emergency room because it is difficult to assess the severity of illness.

Before the emergency outpatient visit

In fact, the majority of children admitted to the pediatric emergency outpatient department are said to have mild symptoms. On the other hand, there are some urgent situations that require immediate medical attention, so carefully monitoring is required. Whenever possible wait until normal office hours since the emergency outpatient units give severe life-threatening patients first priority, in addition to providing only stop-gap measures, having limited number of emergency staff and long waiting time.

Fever If your child has a fever, but is otherwise well and stays hydrated, you can wait and see how the next day goes. However, if the child is unconscious, unresponsive, has spasms, strong abdominal pain, or can't drink water, seek a doctor immediately. The body automatically raises its temperature in response to infection. A fever can slow the growth of many pathogens until other body defenses can be mobilized. Get lots of rest, apply cool compress over the back of the neck and armpits, drink plenty of fluids to avoid dehydration and get nutrients to help recover.

Spasm Spasm most often occurs with the onset of a fever. Loosen the tight clothing and monitor vital signs while measuring the duration of spasm attacks. Call an ambulance if the spasms last for more than 5 minutes. Placing chopsticks in the mouth to prevent biting of tongue is rather dangerous. Turn the child's head to the side in order to minimize the risk of aspiration, if vomiting occurs.

Prevention of accidental foreign body ingestion

Cigarettes are the most commonly ingested item. Be careful to prevent accidental ingestion by, for example, keeping objects smaller than 4 cm out of children's reach and not giving nuts to children under the age of 3. If a child has ingested an object, take an example of the object to the doctor if possible.

Tips during and after the emergency outpatient visit

The child must be accompanied by someone who knows the child's condition well. Describe the symptoms, especially a behavior that is different from usual, and the course of the illness. Take with you the Maternal and Child Health Handbook [BOSHI KENKO TECHO], medicine notebook, body temperature graph (graph of temperature fluctuation).

Be always aware of your child's health conditions and emergency medical information!

Being mindful and noticing child's change in physical status as quickly as possible will be the first step towards a more precise treatment. The information contained in this guide is generic, therefore you may want to habitually get knowledge about your child's disease or ask questions about emergency procedures to your child's primary doctor. Information on emergency medical services on duty is available inside of the back cover of Newsletter Koho Toyota and on City website. Check to keep up-to-date.

Where to go for an emergency during the night, weekend or holiday?

Primary emergency care

Currently, there is a healthcare system in Toyota City that accepts emergency patients at any time, during the night, weekends and holidays.

If you get injured or ill at night time or on a holiday, go first to the primary emergency care facility. In most cases, first aid including administration of medication and injection will be performed.

Secondary emergency care

If diagnosis or treatment is difficult in primary emergency care, the patient requiring hospitalization and/or surgery may be transferred to one of the 4 secondary emergency care facilities that take turns. They are: Toyota Kosei Hospital, Toyota Memorial Hospital, Asuke Hospital, and Toyota Regional Medical Center.

Tertiary emergency care

Toyota Kosei Hospital and Toyota Memorial Hospital are the facilities that treat patients with CVA (cerebrovascular accident), cardiac infarction, head injury, or patients who are experiencing severe emergency. Operates 24-hours a day.

The patient may not necessarily see a specialist right from the beginning even if he/she goes directly to a secondary or tertiary emergency care facility.

This system was adopted to avoid casual use of secondary or tertiary emergency outpatient services by mild symptoms patients, and to ensure that patients who need emergency care have access to medical care according to their acuity levels.

Your cooperation and understanding is highly appreciated.
